

International Public Health University (IPHU)

Day 8 – 13/11/2018

The final day of the programme consisted of both the Access to Medicines stream and the Gender stream. The primary intention of the sessions today was to exchange the deliberations that took place in the last 3 days in each stream so that all the participants would get a holistic picture of the issues.

The Gender Stream highlighted that their deliberations on various issues like

- discrimination faced by LGBTQ,
- gender-based violence,
- conflict areas like Palestine, Kashmir, etc.

There was also discussions on the various projects that were done by the participants and their contemporary relevance.

The Access to Medicines stream highlighted the mainly on how the incentives on R & D is determined, the undue profit being made by the big pharma and how it is effecting the lives and health of millions of people. This was followed by a satire which highlighted the significance of government interference to ensure health for all.

Post tea, the participants divided themselves into country and regional groups and discussed how the experience and discussions of the programme can be taken back and implemented in their respective countries. There was also deliberation as to the methodology that was to be adopted for the implementation of the same. The same was presented to all by the various county and regional groups post lunch.

This was followed by an extremely interesting session of experience sharing by David Sanders, Delen de la Paz, Claudio Schuftan, Mira Siva, Maria Hamlin, David Legge and Sarojini. There on the certificates to the participants were distributed by photograph sessions.
